The monument to Lenin was dismantled, and in its place the Monument of Independence of Uzbekistan, in the form of the globe, was erected. Later, in front of the pedestal was set a figure of a woman, symbolising the Motherland. Independence Square is now the central square of Tashkent; it hosts celebrations and military parades in the days of special events and public holidays.
- Tashkent Broadway: Sailgokh Street, known locally as 'Broadway', has some street artists and painters, who display their original artworks. The Broadway street is in the very center of Tashkent and connects two main squares of the city, Amir Temur and Independent squares. There are many shopping centers, fashion shops, boutiques, restaurants, and cafes are located on and around the Broadway in Tashkent. Here you may also pick up some handmade crafts, souvenirs and bric-a-bracs. Tashkent's Broadway is also one of the greenest parks in the city with a huge area of shady trees and beautiful fountains.

- Amir Temur Square: Amir Timur Square is surrounded with the buildings of the "Uzbekistan" Hotel, University of Law (former Women's Gymnasium), the Amir Timur Museum, well-known Tashkent Chimes and the Forums Palace - one of the most grandiose architectural structures in Tashkent. Almost all the buildings located around Amir Timur Square have historical importance.
